

Saving Our Nation's Wild Places

Due to less than average rainfall, experts throughout the West are predicting a hot, dry summer, making our wild places extremely vulnerable to fire. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is now hiring physically fit men and women who meet the qualifying experience and other requirements, and desire to fight wildland fires. Positions include:

Forestry Tech
Supervisory Forestry Tech
Range/Forestry Tech
Supervisory Range Tech/Forestry
Fire Management Officer
Fire Management Officer Trainee

Range Technician
Lead Range Technician
Supervisory Range Technician
Range Aid (Dispatch)
Assistant Fire Management Officer
Prescribed Fire Specialist

Vacancy announcements, qualification requirements, and application procedures for fire positions described above can be found on the Pacific Region's website: www.r1.fws.gov. Click on the blinking flame; go down to Geographical Area and choose All Western States, then Status Employee, choose No, then click on Submit.

For more information about pay and benefits, please contact Jerry Wells, Workforce Recruiter, at 503-231-2260, or by e-mail at fw1_fire_jobs@r1.fws.gov. If you would like the opportunity to see and save America's most beautiful wild places, contact us today!

